DENY INSURGENTS HAVE CAPTURED BORDER CITY

COLON, Panama, April 16.—Reports that Cape Gracias A Dios, a Nicaraguan seaport near the Honduran border, had been captured by insurgent forces were denied here today by United States navy officials.

The Tropical Radio Company was working interruptedly with its station in the town, and had received no reports of disturbances.

It was learned today that the U. S. S. Sacramento was dispatched northward under emergency orders last night, presumably to Puerto Cabezas, where the situation remains threatening.

CLAIM BRITAIN MAY BAR SPANISH ROYAL FAMILY FROM DOORS

Claim Presence Is Embarrassing To Government

PARIS, April 16.—The exiled Spanish royal family, rendered temporarily homeless by the Republican upheaval in Spain, may find the doors of Britain unofficially barred to them, it was reported here today.

Coinciding with the arrival of Queen Victoria and her children by train, it was reported the British foreign office had hinted that the presence of the royal exiles in England might be "embarrassing" due to the fact that Alfonso XIII has not actually abdicated his throne.

The deposed king and his family intended to take up residence in England because of their many close ties with the British monarchy.

When Alfonso was overthrown, it was generally believed he had issued a declaration of abdication, and announcement to this effect was made by the provisional Republican government in Madrid.

Subsequently, however, publication of the exiled king's manifesto revealed that he was merely quitting the country in an effort to forestall civil war, and rigidly declined to renounce any of his royal prerogatives.

As a former monarch, Alfonso would have been more than welcome in England, but his status of a king "on vacation" from a country that has ceased to be a monarchy places him in a peculiar situation.

Reports telling of the foreign office hint declared it was extremely likely that Alfonso now would remain in France until after the parliamentary elections in Spain, expected to be held in June, Alfonso has pinned his hopes on these elections, hoping for a technical monarchist victory, which, he feels, would enable him to return to the throne.

Being a republic, France is able to play host to Alfonso without complications or embarrassment whether he is an ex-king or merely a monarch clinging to the shreds of his royal power in voluntary exile.

PROPOSALS OF OHIO TAX COMMITTEE ARE ALREADY ATTACKED

Blunders Charged By Speakers; Utilities Are Defended

COLUMBUS, O., April 16.—Three serious blunders were charged to the legislature's special taxation committee today before the six members were off to even a fair start in their month's deliberation of Ohio finance problems.

Chief of the alleged offenses, Ohio business as represented by the Ohio Chamber of Commerce declared, was the committee's suggestion that the state expropriate tax on public utilities be boosted.

Protesting that utilities have been hard hit by the business depression, George B. Chandler, president of the State Chamber of Commerce, warned the committee that the expropriation of tax on public utilities would be tantamount to "taxing the poor" and "taxing the necessities of life."

The committee's plan, offered only a few hours before, to set up elective and non-salaried county budget commissions in an effort to curtail local spending also was charged with being unwise by Chandler.

He advocated giving broader powers to the state tax commission and allowing state supervision of county expenditures. The committee had previously abandoned such a plan because it feared counties would resent state intervention.

Third of the so-called mistakes was explained to the committee by Ralph Minor of Akron, representing the Ohio Manufacturers Association. He said the proposal to tax manufacturing machinery and inventories on book value would lead to serious inequalities because "book value is not real value."

Senator Robert A. Taft (R) of Cincinnati, chairman of the committee, said it was nearer the real value than any other.

A gloomy picture of the business outlook for public utilities in Ohio was painted for the committee in Chandler's talk. He said utility losses in the past year have been tremendous but have generally been concealed.

Launching into an argument of economics, Chandler objected to the general belief that public utilities are natural monopolies, and therefore ought to be taxed heavily. He said they are subject to "real or potential competition from other industrial units at all times."

The committee has based this proposed increase on nothing but false premises, he complained. Senator Taft, however, assured him that the plan was merely tentative.

SPECIAL CONGRESS SESSION DEMANDED TO ATTEMPT RELIEF

Democrat — Insurgent Group Renews Its Attacks

WASHINGTON, April 16.—The persistent demand for a special session of congress was renewed today when Democratic and insurgent leaders declared existing government agencies are inadequate to relieve agricultural and unemployment distress.

Senator Nye (R) of North Dakota, and Senator Walsh (D) of Montana, united in demanding a special session. Both agreed the administration was without an adequate plan for carrying agriculture through another crop year and had failed in providing relief for unemployment. They insisted congress should be called into extra session to relieve unemployment and enact a farm relief measure, designed to save agriculture from another disastrous season.

Administration leaders opposed the suggestion as they did in the closing days of the last regular session.

Senator Watson, Republican leader of the senate, joined with the assistant leader, Senator McNary (R) of Oregon, in declaring the country was benefitting by the vacation of congress.

"I am opposed to a special session as everybody knows," said Watson. "The adjournment of congress brought a favorable psychological reaction among business men and business interests. It allayed their alarms as to what legislation might be enacted. Now the business people are regaining their confidence and business is steadily improving. All these gains might be lost. We must let business mend its own affairs for a while before we attempt further legislation."

CAPONE ALLY IS GANGLAND VICTIM

FEAR SHOOTING MAY PRECIPITATE GANG BATTLE IN NEW YORK

Racketeer Slain In Coney Cafe By Two Gunmen

NEW YORK, April 16.—A violent gang war was predicted in New York today as the aftermath of the killing of Giuseppe Masseria, known as "Joe, the boss." He was said by police to be an ally of Al Capone and worked with the Chicago gang leader in the liquor business, racketeering and gambling.

Masseria was shot to death in a Coney Island cafe by two well dressed young men who calmly walked into the restaurant and began shooting. They fired twenty shots. Five struck Masseria—all in the back. He was found dead near an overturned card table.

The killers walked leisurely out of the cafe and escaped in an automobile.

An armored steel car, equipped with bullet proof glass an inch thick, in which "Joe, the Boss" was said to have traveled to protect him from enemies, was found near the scene of shooting.

"Joe, the boss" was free under $45,000 bail as a material witness in the killing of two men slain in a feud over a police racket, authorities revealed.

About twenty-eight years ago Masseria came from Italy as a boy of sixteen and it was not long before he had built the foundations of a career which some detectives said today rated him more powerful in gangland circles than Capone himself.

Masseria, police said, had a hand in every racket that existed. Authorities, however, were never able to "pin anything" on him.

"Joe, the Boss" also escaped many attempts to kill him. In 1920 Salvatore Mauro was shot down and Masseria was sought by both police and Mauro's friends. Joe was cleared by the police and the victim's friends never caught up with him.

In 1922 Vincent Morelli, nephew of "Lupo the Wolf," was killed and a gang sought Masseria. They met him at a block from police headquarters and opened fire. Sixty shots were fired and a woman and four men were left wounded in the gutter, but "Joe, the Boss" was gone and unharmed.

In the same year two gangs met on a street and opened fire. Masseria was in a direct line of fire as pistols cracked but he escaped with nothing more damaging than two holes in his straw hat. Six innocent cloak workers were wounded by the bullets intended for Masseria. The poor shooting was an attempt to avenge the murder of Sylvio Tagliagambra, one of the big boss' numerous enemies.

Later enemies of Masseria again fired at him in the street. A girl and street cleaner were wounded but also, as always, the boss dodged and escaped unhurt.

Police asserted the killing of Masseria looked like an "inside job." They said he must have been betrayed by some of his own gang who led him to the cafe and then, as prearranged, the hired killers walked in to end his feverish life.

INTRODUCING MRS. S. S. VAN DINE

S. S. Van Dine, who is really William Huntington Wright, may be able to keep the identity of the murder a secret until the last page in his well known mystery stories, but he could only keep his marriage a secret for six months. The novelist is shown here with Mrs. Van Dine, who was Claire de Lisle, a New York portrait painter. They were married by a New Jersey judge six months ago.

Spanish Royal Family Is Seeking Peace In France

PARIS, April 16.—The royal family of Spain, ushered into exile with characteristic native courtesy as the ancient Bourbon monarchy changed to a republic, entered France by two different routes today enroute to London.

King Alfonso, asserting he left the country to avert a civil war but revealing he did not sign any articles of abdication, stepped upon French soil at Marseilles from the Spanish cruiser Principe Alfonso at 6:30 a. m.

Queen Victoria and four of her five children reached Paris from Hendaye at 9:20 a. m. to await further instructions from Alfonso. The infant Don Juan, third son of the royal couple, remained indefinitely at Gibraltar.

The exiled Spanish monarch refused to make a statement, but his chamberlain gave International News Service the following authorized message:

"His majesty confirms herewith that he will rejoin his family and continue to London as soon as possible."

"His majesty wishes to point out that he never abdicated. Therefore, he reserves all royal rights and remains at the disposition of his people."

Shortly afterward, Alfonso left Marseilles by train for Paris to rejoin Queen Victoria and the children.

The exiled monarch was due in Paris at 11:10 this evening.

Forced to leave Spain twenty-five years to the day after she entered that country in triumph as queen of Alfonso, Queen Victoria was greeted here by a fervent

THREE ACCUSED OF OPERATING "BADGER GAME" ON SALESMAN

AKRON, O., April 16.—Two men and a woman, who are alleged to have operated a "badger" game on several business men in Pennsylvania and Ohio, were held in custody of police today.

The trio was arrested, according to police, after allegedly attempting to fleece an Akron automobile dealer, a brother of a city detective, out of an automobile and $500.

Police said today that the two men and woman allegedly confessed to playing the "badger" game on business men of Alliance, Youngstown and Sharon, Pa., receiving hundreds of dollars and automobiles for their efforts.

According to authorities, the woman negotiated for the purchase of an automobile from the Akron dealer and asked him to come to her home to complete the deal. While the two were alone talking over the purchase, the two men walked into the room, one of them claiming to be her husband and demanded an explanation of the business man.

Drawing a pistol, the husband forced the auto dealer to sign a check for $500 and give the woman the automobile, detectives said. Instead of returning to the apartment with $500 in cash to redeem the check as he had agreed to do, the dealer notified police and the arrests followed.

AMBITIOUS TO BE GREATEST CRIMINAL

DUESSELDORF, Germany, April 16.—Peter Kuerten, Germany's so-called "vampire slayer" who is on trial for his life here charged with sixteen murders, declared under examination by alienists today that his aim was to become "the greatest criminal in history."

Kuerten, according to the charges leveled against him, made considerable progress toward realization of his ambition, committing nearly 100 crimes of violence over a period of several years.

The prisoner told the physicians he was planning to switch from individual murders to wholesale killings through bombing and arson when he was apprehended.

Kuerten is charged specifically with sixteen murders. Police say he has confessed to forty-five.

SOLON GUILTY IN BRIBE CASE

Convict Rowbolton Of Selling Jobs

EVANSVILLE, Ind., April 16.—Convicted on four counts of selling postoffice appointments, former Representative Harry E. Rowbottom, today faced a sentence of one year and a day at Leavenworth and a $2,000 fine.

Federal Judge Woodward of Chicago, sentenced the former congressman yesterday after a jury deliberating two hours, found him guilty of four out of nine counts.

Defense attorneys Philip G. Gould and Raymond S. Springer, indicated they would not appeal. Rowbottom was ordered to appear Monday at the United States marshal's office in Indianapolis to be taken to prison.

He will be eligible for a parole in four months.

Among the counts on which Rowbottom was convicted was that he agreed to receive $750 from Walter G. Ayer of Rockport in return for recommending a son, Gresham Ayer, as a rural mail carrier.

SECOND QUAKE FELT IN MEXICAN CITY

MEXICO CITY, April 16.—The second earthquake within twenty-four hours rocked the town of Pinotepa in the state of Oaxaca today.

Although no damage was caused, the population was thrown into panic, owing to the recent prediction of Senator Nolte Bustamante, Mexican astrologer, that a severe quake would rock the state of Oaxaca on January 15.

The city of Oaxaca was virtually destroyed by a quake on January 22.

TREASURY BALANCE
WASHINGTON, April 16.—Treasury balance as of April 14, $375,611,234.06; expenditures, $7,457,938.99; customs receipts, $15,596,998.47.

HOOVER POLICY OVER NICARAGUAN CRISIS REVEALED AS CHANGE

American Forces Not To Be Used To Fight Rebels

WASHINGTON, April 16.—Repudiation of the Central American policy of the Coolidge and previous administrations, was seen today in the policy just disclosed by the Hoover administration in the use of American forces in the present Nicaraguan crisis at Puerto Cabezas.

Despite the call on the state department and the navy for protection of American property in eastern Nicaragua, which came from the Standard Fruit and Steamship Company, Secretary of State Stimson has delegated the job to native Nicaraguan National Guardsmen. American forces will not be used, the state department announced.

It is true the natives are commanded by American marine officers but they are an integral part of the Nicaraguan Guardia for the present.

The American government, under the policy just disclosed, will protect the lives of Americans and foreigners in unsettled Central America as far as possible. American warships will continue to answer any call for assistance and will afford asylum, Stimson made clear. He declined to make a formal announcement of his policy, which is accepted as a reversal of the Kellogg policy under Secretary of State Frank G. Kellogg and of Charles E. Hughes under Harding.

The new policy, may be stated thus:

It is accepted that when Americans go to a foreign country and engage in business, they are subject to the laws of that country, and it is their risk.

As a matter of international practice, however, where a nation is unable to protect the lives and property, other nations have intervened and afforded the necessary protection. The American government considers it a matter of discretion as to how far it should go in this regard.

This rule applies to property when it is endangered by failure of the country involved to afford the protection.

The Hoover administration, it was declared, does not propose to become involved again in a general campaign to protect property in Nicaragua.

The Hoover administration has taken the view, it was said, that the former policy in Nicaragua, under which the marines went into that country has led to such abuses and dangers, that it will no longer be continued.

The same interests whose demands for protection caused President Coolidge to order marines back to Nicaragua, are calling on the government for aid in the present crisis, officials at both the navy and state departments said.

Because the demands for protection by Americans in Nicaragua have been more vigorous than those demands from other Central American countries, it was said, it has been difficult for the state department to avoid a position of actual intervention.

Her grade in the civil service test was found to entitle her to regain the position.

The couple, Prince and Princess Takamatsu, the former a younger brother of the Japanese emperor, are the guests of the capital, and last night were given a state dinner at the White House by President and Mrs. Hoover.

The White House was a bower of cherry blossoms. The trees were the gift of the Japanese government during the Taft administration.

TY COBB FACES DIVORCE SUIT

Expresses Surprise Over Wife's Suit

MONTEREY, Calif., April 16.—Tyrus Raymond Cobb, the erstwhile "Georgia Peach" of baseball fame, today was reported enroute to his home in Augusta, Ga., where his wife has filed suit for divorce.

Upon leaving here yesterday, the man who has broken more records in baseball than any other, expressed surprise at his wife's action.

He said:

"I am surprised and shocked to be placed in my present position. A statement from me at this time comes very hard. I have always loved my wife, my children and my home. I am sorry that such apparent haste was taken in this action, but I was absent from home and before consulting me in the matter."

In his wife's divorce suit, filed yesterday, Cobb learned the charge was mental cruelty. Mrs. Cobb asked temporary alimony and the custody of their four children, Shirley, Herschel, 14, Beverly, 11, and Howard, 9.

The Cobbs were married in 1908. Cobb retired as a major league ball player in 1928.

PARIS, April 16.—The famed Bourbon jewels valued at $10,000,000, including the royal crown and ceremonial diamond-studded diamonds were brought here from Spain today by Queen Victoria, it was learned on good authority.

Police and members of her entourage maintained the strictest secrecy in connection with the valuables.

LEAVES TO PREVENT CIVIL WAR WITHOUT RENOUNCING POWER

Spain Technically Is Monarchy Despite New Republic

MADRID, April 16.—The republic of Spain, struggling to its feet under the guidance of Provisional President Alcalá Zamora, today remained technically a monarchy on revelation that Alfonso XIII, forced by popular demand to leave the country, refused to abdicate.

Without renouncing royal rights or signing the documents that would have wiped out the 1000-year-old Bourbon dynasty, the adamant king yielded to the advice of political leaders and stepped from the throne to avert civil war.

But even as joy-mad Spaniards received with deafening cheers a manifesto of the republican government pledging itself to the establishment of a constitutional government with a full bill of rights, Alfonso served notice on political leaders that he remained king of Spain and intended to return.

The sharp statement of the departed monarch was kept from public eyes here, but monarchist circles accepted it as proof that the days of royalty had not yet vanished from Spain and predicted a return of their sovereign.

"Until the nation has spoken, I deliberately suspend exercise of my royal power and depart from Spain, thus recognizing she is the sole mistress of her destinies," Alfonso was quoted as stating.

Refusing to believe that the people of Spain, ruled by monarchs for fifteen centuries with only two brief intervals, were anything but monarchistic at heart, Alfonso outlined his convictions as follows:

"The elections held on Sunday revealed clearly to me that I have lost the love of my people. My conscience tells me that this disaffection will not be permanent because I have always served Spain. My only aim, even in the most critical circumstances, was public interest. A king can make mistakes and, without doubt, I have erred sometimes, but I well know that our country has always shown

TUNNEL FIRE HERO

Repeatedly defying death, Irving Strom, 28-year-old Chicago fireman, brought seven of the eleven men to the surface who died in the drainage tunnel disaster and made other trips into the burning tunnel in search of bodies. Strom was finally forced by his superiors to desist in his heroic rescue work.

GOVERNMENT COSTS RISING UNDER WHITE BOOKKEEPER SHOWS

Departments Are Not Helping Economy Campaign

COLUMBUS, O., April 16.—Despite Governor George White's persistent demand for economy, state expenditures during the first three months of his term in office increased $1,975,610 over the same period in 1930, statistics compiled by Bookkeeper John H. Ferguson of the state finance department revealed today.

In making his quarterly report, Ferguson complained that the governor's demand for decreases in state spending has gone unheeded in many departments.

"Please accept this as a final warning that unless directors of the various departments give expenditures their personal attention, the finance department and the governor will have a difficult job in explaining our economy program to the taxpayers at the end of 1931," Ferguson said in a statement issued to departments along with the report.

A decrease in spending was reported in the governor's office, the budget office and various divisions of the commerce department.

Ferguson asked that a plan be immediately drawn "to eliminate waste in salaries and maintenance" at state educational institutions.

A part of the increase was due to the legislature's meeting here, he said. Approximately $200,000 was used for legislative purposes which was not needed last year when the assembly was not in session.

JOE CLEAR QUITS

COLUMBUS, O., April 16.—Joseph D. Clear, formerly of Preble County, today relinquished his post with the state. Clear was retained by the administration of Governor George White to complete the investigation of the disastrous Easter Monday fire at Ohio Penitentiary.

CHICKEN AND DUCK MOVIES ARE LATEST

By Central Press
HOLLYWOOD, April 16.—With a "quack-quack" here, and a "cluck-cluck" there, as the barnyard song goes, the newest contingent of film performers has arrived in Hollywood.

Although each of these thespians, ladies and gentlemen, is a star, there never is a display of temperament on the lot. Just as long as each receives three satisfactory meals daily all is peaceful, except for an occasional cackle.

You see, these talkie actors and actresses are chickens and ducks. The picture has been made on a large stage entirely screened from the public. There the White Leghorn hen, the Barred Plymouth Rock rooster, the white ducks and the mallards perform.

None of the fowls has had any previous stage training. The pretty White Leghorn smiles demurely as the doughty Plymouth rescues her from the clutches of the villain, a mallard duck, with the aid of a brave policeman. The police force is composed entirely of white ducks.

Exterior action takes place on two village streets, one seven feet long and the other 60 feet in length.

In the interior of a theater, in which a gala feathered performance is given, more than 150 chickens and ducks are used, without a casualty, according to Director Neal Burns.

As in the various other movies featuring dogs, monkeys, and animated mice human voices lend to the comedy effect.

FARMER CONVICTED

LONDON, O., April 16.—Convicted on assault and battery charges which claimed that he shot and wounded C. C. Meals, a Springfield contractor, in the leg, Herman Hornbeck, Madison County farmer today awaited a sentence pending the hearing of a motion for new trial.

FIVE DEFENDANTS WILL FACE ACTION

SAN DIEGO, April 16.—Trial on charges of violating the juvenile court laws today faces Alexander Pantages, theatrical magnate, and his four co-defendants.

They were bound over yesterday by Justice of the Peace A. H. Mundo, following a hearing growing out of Hollywood's sensational "girl bazaar."

Justice Mumbo said from the bench that while the case against Pantages, Jesse Shreve, John P. Mills, Olive Day and William Jobelmann, was not "the strongest" he had ever heard, he did feel that a case exists.

Pantages faces charges of conspiracy to violate the juvenile court, a felony, a violation of the juvenile court law, a high grade misdemeanor.

BURNED TO DEATH

KILGORE, Texas, April 16.—Joe Lamb was burned to death and two other men were seriously injured today when a battery of oil tanks near Humble Camp exploded and caught fire.

A spark thrown out from an automobile exhaust when the car backfired ignited a gas pocket which set fire to the oil tanks.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord. —Jeremiah, xxxiii, 23, 24.

JAPAN'S FRIENDSHIP

The communist demonstration in New York against Prince Takamatsu will not seriously affect the relations between the United States and Japan. The Japanese have their own communist disturbers of the peace. A wallop on the jaw, administered by a Gotham bluecoat to a leader of last week's demonstration, appears to have squared matters admirably. The incident may be forgotten. Since Citizen Genet made his triumphal march from Charleston to Philadelphia, which permitted the pro-French rabble to reveal their bitterness toward England, which was then at war with France, we have suffered from these popular demonstrations for or against foreign dignitaries on our soil. The world at large has come to take them for what they are—ebullitions of factional spirit.

The visit of Prince and Princess Takamatsu is a compliment to this country. They could have returned from England to Japan by way of Suez. The fact that they chose to call on the United States on their way home is evidence of a disposition on the part of the ruling family in Japan to emphasize the cordiality of the relations existing between the two countries. The young brother of the emperor of Japan cannot help being a prince. That's the way he was born. The communists do not like princes; but the American people generally are disposed to look for the man behind the title.

All our communists and jingoes to the contrary notwithstanding, America has no better friend among the nations than Japan. The superficial interests of the United States conflict at points with those of Japan, as they do with those of most important foreign powers; but the Japanese have always shown, when friction has risen, a broad-mindedness unsurpassed in our diplomacy. The visit of Prince and Princess Takamatsu was not taken without the approval of the Japanese government. Consequently, as well for that reason as because of the gracious deportment of the prince and princess themselves, Americans are pleased to entertain their royal highnesses and to assure them that the friendly feeling of Japan for the United States is reciprocated.

ABOLISHING JURIES

"Scandalous decisions" are given as the reason for the impending abolition of juries in criminal cases in Italy. After July 1 criminals will be tried by juridical committees composed of two professional judges and five nontechnical citizens, who will act as "assessors." The caliber of these committees will be sustained by limiting the classes from which the assessors will be chosen.

A person to be eligible for selection as an assessor will have to be a senator or a deputy or a member of the grand council, a member of the royal academy or of some literary, artistic or scientific body, a principal or rector of a school, a reeve of a commune of more than 5,000 population, an author of published literary or scientific works, a graduate of a university or other institution of higher learning, a high bureaucratic servant of the state, or an army officer of the rank of captain or higher. The assessors will serve two years and will receive about $2.60 for each day they are on duty.

Juries are more easily abolished in Italy than they could be in this country, where they are still regarded, with all the faults of many of them, as indispensable bulwarks of liberty. Outrageous decisions by American juries have raised the question of doing away with the whole system, which is answered variously by men learned in the law. The juridical committee that Signor Mussolini is about to substitute for the juries picked after our own haphazard fashion promises an improvement in the intellectual capacity of those placed in judgment over their fellow citizens. American jealousy of personal liberty makes it highly improbable that any such reform in our judicial system would be countenanced for a long time to come.

SCHOOL BUS HERO TO VISIT HOOVER

Convalescence seems doubly slow to Brian Untiedt, 13-year-old hero of the Towner, Colo., school bus tragedy since he is eager to accept President Hoover's invitation to pass a night in the White House. When the president heard of the boy's heroic battle to keep his school chum alive, while they awaited to be rescued from the snowbound bus, he decided to invite the lad to Washington. Brian has been in a Lamar, Colo., hospital, recovering from severe frost bite, as the result of his 36-hour vigil during which he saw his brother, Orin, freeze. Photos show Brian as a hospital patient, the bus and President Hoover.

"THE GOOD STORY"

STEWART APPRAISES MEN IN LINE AS SUCCESSOR TO SPEAKER LONGWORTH

CHARLES F. STEWART

WASHINGTON—The suddenness of Speaker Longworth's elimination and the absence from Washington of the majority of Republican congressional leaders has left speculation concerning the question of a successor to the Ohioan's place at his party's head in the next house of representatives in a state of complete disorganization.

While it is true that Longworth's re-election to the speakership was in doubt, he would even if defeated have remained the generalissimo of the G. O. P.'s forces on the floor, a post of about as much importance and even more delicacy, considering the evenness of the balance of power, than the occupancy of the chair itself under such one-sided conditions as prevailed at the last session. For a task of this sort the highly diplomatic and exceedingly popular Buckeye would have been enormously valuable and it will be hard to find a substitute for him which ever party may prove strong enough to organize the house for the ensuing two years.

John Q. Tilson of Connecticut is perhaps the best bet. He is the logical successor to Longworth and a capable manager, but never has given evidence of an ambition to wield the gavel. Rather, his desires have been in the line of the vice presidency, for which he was a receptive candidate in 1928 and has been talked of in anticipation of 1932.

Still, he has two years to go before vice presidential honors will be available to him in any event, and it would add to his prestige to spend them in the speaker's chair. Thus it is possible he will claim it as his prerogative. Should he do so, it will not be easy to deny him what he wants—nor is there any question concerning his suitability. As a member of the Old Guard he cannot be very pleasing to the Progressives, but neither was Longworth.

Colonel Tilson was not of the group which was most enthusiastic over President Hoover's nomination at Kansas City, but he has been loyal to the Californian nevertheless and served as something of a political tutor to him during his campaign. Chairman Bertrand H. Snell of the house rules committee, who with Longworth and Tilson was a member of the triumvirate which reorganized following the period of laxity immediately after Uncle Joe Cannon's czaristic regime, lacks the temperament for the direction of field operations, being essentially a planner behind the scenes.

As a frequent substitute for Speaker Longworth in the chair, Representative Carl R. Chindblom of Chicago has done much effective work for the house's dominating element, but is minus the showy attributes which were so important a part of Longworth's success.

All else being equal seniority is a consideration in the choice of a party's candidate for the speakership. Representative Gilbert N. Haugen of Iowa now heads the list in this respect, but at his age of more than 70 it is unlikely he would care for the responsibility and hard work involved.

Of Republicans, Chairman Willis C. Hawley of the ways and means committee is next after Haugen, but is more a man of figures than of diplomacy, not to mention the fact that his name is associated with the present new tariff law of somewhat questionable popularity. Following Hawley come in order, Representatives James C. McLaughlin of Michigan and Burton L. French of Idaho. The latter may prove something of a possibility. He is popular, efficient, a good presiding officer and has a wider congressional reputation than the rank and file of mere representatives, partly by reason of long service, partly for real ability.

Fred A. Britten of Illinois is well toward the top of the seniority list, and has more than the average standing on the strength of his chairmanship of the well advertised naval affairs committee. He has not been mentioned as in line for the speakership, but may be yet. He has vigor and ambition, but no gift for compromise, which is badly wanted in a party leader. Representative Franklin Fort of New Jersey is perhaps unlucky in having lost his seat as a result of his unsuccessful campaign for the senatorial nomination last year. Otherwise, as a close personal friend of the president and an exceptionally able lawmaker on his own account he surely would have been a formidable contender for the speakership vacancy.

Today's Recipes

Baked Cheese Tamale—Three large onions cut fine, three tablespoons drippings, two cups tomatoes, two teaspoons salt, one and one-half cups cornmeal, pepper, five cups boiling water, one cup grated cheese. Cook the onions in the drippings for ten minutes. Add the tomatoes, one teaspoon salt and a little pepper, and cook ten minutes longer. Sprinkle the cornmeal slowly into the boiling water, add the two teaspoons of salt, stir constantly and cook for fifteen minutes. Into a greased baking dish place alternate layers of the mixtures and sprinkle each layer with the cheese for the top layer. Bake about 25 minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.). Serve from the dish.

Suggestions

Spring Salad
A "spring" salad may be quickly made from cream cheese and celery and a bit of vegetable coloring. Soften the cheese with a little sweet or sour cream, and color small portions of it yellow, pale pink and green. Cut the celery in one and one-half-inch stalks, and shred these small stalks. Arrange a nest of these celery pieces on some shredded lettuce, form the cream cheese into small Easter eggs, and place them in the nest. Not much extra work and as cute as can be.

Sandwich Loaf

Trim the crusts from a sandwich loaf. Cut the bread in slices lengthwise the loaf. Spread the first slice with softened butter and then with a sandwich spread. Place the second slice over this, spread it with the softened butter and then with deviled ham. Cover with the third slice, spread with butter and cream cheese mixed with a tart mayonnaise. Top with the fourth slice. Work cream cheese to a rich paste with a little sweet or sour cream and spread over the entire loaf. Wrap in waxed paper and chill for at least an hour in the refrigerator. Remove the paper and slice at the table.

Baking-Vegetables

Have you tried baking your vegetables as well as the meats? Put the prepared vegetable in a buttered casserole, add a cup or so of water, season, cover the dish and bake right in the oven at the same time the roast is cooking. Allow a little longer time than when cooking them on top of the stove.

Belt Turner

One of my most helpful sewing aids is a piece of strong, hard finished twine about one yard long. A knot tied at each end prevents it from unraveling. When making narrow belts and sashes which are always difficult to turn I simply seam the cord in the sash, fasten securely at one end, and pulling on the loose end, turn the belt or sash in a second, no matter how narrow it may be.

DAME FASHION TRIES HER HAND AT MAGIC TRICKS

You've often seen the magician pull a rabbit out of a man's pocket or other unexpected place, but Dame Fashion does an even niftier stunt by taking an umbrella out of what resembles an ordinary handbag. Pictured, upper left, Rochelle Hudson shows her smart handbag open; right, she displays the umbrella which was concealed therein. Above at center, Loretta Young displays the jeweled comb that is the last word in coiffure adornment when out for a gay evening. Below, Evalyn Knapp is pictured wearing her new scarf and bag of kasha embroidered in soft shades of green just received from Paris. Left, below, a pair of gray kid slippers trimmed with diagonal stripes of lizard skin; right, watersnake pumps trimmed with black kid.

Sweet Bells Are Jangled

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

"Sweet bells jangled out of tune," that is what I think when so. One can always find trouble with father, mother and babies, is a place of wrangling and heartache.

All so needless, too, all the unhappiness. Just a little self-forgetfulness and thought for others. A little more love as the years go on instead of less. A little self-restraint used when the unkind word flashes in the mind to prevent it from being spoken.

"DEAR VIRGINIA LEE: We have been married four years and have two babies. The first year of our married life was the happiest ever. Then my father-in-law came to live with us and my husband got jealous.

"I know it is both our faults when we quarrel, but he says it is all my fault. I crave home and happiness, and the more I can be with my hubby the happier I am, but he always prefers some one other than me for company. He always says 'I for everything as I thought I don't do anything to share an interest in life.

"I've tried to hate him, but just love him all the more, and the babies are wild about him. He does care any more for them than for me. He says he loves me better all the time, but don't you think actions speak louder than words? He says he knows I have too much to do with other men and he'll catch me sometime and then he will kill us both. But, Virginia, I've been as true as a person could be to him. What is your advice?"

"MRS. C. V. M." I suppose if your father-in-law hadn't come to live with you to make him jealous something else would have happened to make him so. One can always find trouble if one really looks for it. Sure, are you, that you give him no cause to suspect you of unfaithfulness? It is easy to swear you love your husband and him alone and still have a come-hither look in your eye for other men. If there is no cause for his feeling the only thing to do is to have patience, do everything in your power to keep peace in the home, and hope that in time he will appreciate you and the home you make for him. Above all, DON'T QUARREL. He can't fight by himself, if you keep back the angry words when he aggravates you. Take good care of the babies and make up your mind to keep a happy home for them.

Gray Eyes: Girls who visit men's colleges for social affairs should be accompanied by a chaperone. They usually stay at an inn or hotel. Couldn't your mother or some young married relative or friend go with you? It may be that you are older than your age and so attract older men. Your thinness would make no difference. A boy usually writes first after meeting a girl.

Worried Jane: Are you sure the druggist wasn't kidding you when he asked you to marry him? If he was serious, surely he would ask you for a date. Knowing nothing whatever about him I can't very well tell you how to win him.

It is not against the law for second cousins to marry. I answered this question before.

Skyscraper Must Shun Long Lines

By GLADYS GLAD

Tall girls, I find, are often just as sensitive about their height as short girls—and with just as little reason. For tallness is no more a curse than is shortness. Some of our loveliest screen stars are above the average height. The extremely smart Lilyan Tashman is all of five feet seven inches tall. The great Garbo herself is five feet six inches tall. And Mlle Ostrowsky, one of the foremost models of Paris couture, is six feet one inch tall in her bare tootsies! Read those figures and stop your weeping!

The gal with the skyscraperish tendencies can do little or nothing when it comes to actually reducing her stature. Once she's acquired those feet and inches, they're hers for keeps. But she certainly can do a great deal to make herself appear shorter by the manner in which she gowns herself. Every article of clothing, from hat to shoes, can be made to serve the purpose of reducing the apparent height of the figure.

The tall girl should, first of all, avoid vertical, flowing lines in her gowning. For her, horizontal and broken lines are more suitable. Such lines may be created by cut, as in cape-dresses, boleros, tunics and belted, flared and ruffled frocks. Gowns designed along these lines cut the figure, and thus tend to reduce its apparent height.

The horizontal lines may also be achieved by color contrast. Flocks of horizontally striped materials, or of large patterned fabrics will help to make the tall girl appear shorter. Two-piece costumes, with skirts and blouses of different hues, will also help to achieve this effect.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES

Perspiration

Albertis: A mild solution of warm water and alum should effectively remedy the excessive perspiration of your back. Frequent baths are also essential.

Nails

Mrs. P. R.: Massage a bit of warmed olive oil into the base of your nails nightly before retiring. This will help to remedy the dry, brittle condition of your nails.

Blackheads

Isabel: Correct cleansing methods, the use of an astringent, and frequent egg packs, will help to clear your skin of blackheads. You must be persevering in your treatments, however.

Editor's Note: While it is impossible for Miss Glad to answer beauty questions by mail, she will be happy to send you her pamphlets on "The New Figure" and "Beauty Culture" if you will write her, care of this paper, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope and 16 cents in coin for each, to cover cost of printing and handling. For the articles on "Care of the Hands and Nails" and "Care of the Feet and Legs," 2 cents in coin for each, and a self-addressed, stamped envelope are required. Personal questions on beauty will be answered through Miss Glad's daily column.

SPORT SNAP SHOTS FRAMED by Phil

All-Stars and Central High School loom as the outstanding contenders for the American League softball title this season while St. Brigid's entry may upset calculations and come under the wire first.

The All-Star roster, its eligibility list reveals, includes most of the players who participated last year with the Kiwanis-Rotary nine, which finished second to the Krippendorff-Dittmann Co. Marvin Putnam, Del McCoy and Bob "Butch" Gagner are new additions to the squad, the remaining eligible players being Tom McClelland, catcher; Fred Lang, center fielder; Carl Ervin, first baseman; "Brownie" Baldwin, third baseman; Carlton Anderson, outfielder; Russ Kimmer, pitcher; V. Moll, short stop; and Arnold Boxwell. Boxie will doubtless not be available to the team all summer, however, as he will not be here. The All-Stars submitted the names of only eleven players and will now be entitled to two more.

Under the new softball rules players who participated last year with those teams from which eligibility lists are required must sign on the dotted line to player-contracts. The contract drawn up for the All-Star players was rather a work of art. It reads thusly:

"I, the undersigned, agree to play softball with the team known as the All-Stars, or something during the season of 1931. For these services the manager of said team agrees to pay me the sum of $10.00, providing the manager in his good judgment things these services are worth the above amount. Otherwise I am to receive nothing, which no doubt will be the amount less several deducts. The undersigned further agrees to forfeit his rights to play with the team known as the All-Stars if he fails to report for duty later than 5:30 on the day of battle. The undersigned relieves the management of any responsibilities in case of injury received while participating in any of these scheduled conflicts."

Each contract bears the names of two official witnesses and the affidavit is duly sworn to by a notary public. That is what is known as doing it up in style.

In all probability the St. Brigid list will have to be reduced because it bears the names of eighteen prospective players, six more than the maximum number permitted. The players listed are as follows: Robert Roach, Leo Foley, John King, Clarence Walsh, Joseph Fletcher, John Paddy, Edw. Murphy, Adrian Downes, Clarence Anderson, Lawrence Hornick, Joseph Zenni, Charles McNamee, Guido Pesavento, John Graham, Fred Haller, Clarence Rachford, Jimmie McCormick and William Kennedy.

Central High, which was not required to hand in a list of players (all the students being eligible), should give good account of itself and may win providing Pat can hold his team together all summer. The Buccaneers have been practicing faithfully and they almost gave Wood's Barber Shop a drubbing in a practice tilt the other night, showing good batting and fielding form.

The Krippendorff entry, which won the American League title last summer and then gave the Lang Chevrolet plenty of competition in the play-off series for the city championship, is to all intents and purposes, rather weak this season, a number of players who were with the team a year ago having transferred their allegiance to some other club.

The Krippendorff list gives the names of only ten players and "Pat" Flynn, who says the shoe factory outfit will be a strong one, had better start searching for a couple more utility prospects. The team lost its 1930 pitcher, Eugene Perrine having gone over to the Red Wings this year.

The Krippendorff players listed are Clarence Green, Robert Luttrell, Virgil Hamilton, William Christ, Ralph Foley, Herb Bailey, Paul Jones, Albert Snell, George Anderson and Thomas Gutlice.

SPRING VALLEY IS VICTOR WEDNESDAY

Scoring sixteen runs on half as many hits, Spring Valley High School's baseball team benefited by opposition errors and walloped Beaver Creek High's nine, 16 to 3 on the Spring Valley diamond late Wednesday afternoon.

The winners obtained eight hits as compared with four bingles for Beaver. Compton smacked a home run for the Valley team.

Reeves and F. Lumpkin shared the pitching burden for Coach Lane's boys, with Starr catching. Kirk was Beaver's hurler with Wayland catching. Reeves struck out five batters, Lumpkin whiffed two and Kirk fanned four.

Spring Valley will engage Dayton Fairmont on the Valley diamond Friday.

TEAM TO PRACTICE

The Red Wing Co. softball team, new entry in the National League this season, will engage in a practice game with the Critteron, another prospective member of the same league, Thursday night at 6 o'clock on the Cox Field diamond, which has been placed in tip-top shape for the coming campaign. All Red Wing players are urged to be on hand promptly.

CEDARVILLE DEFEATS DAYTON BEHIND MASTERFUL PITCHING

Albert Turner carved for himself a permanent niche in Cedarville College's baseball hall of fame when he pitched the Yellow-Jackets to a 4 to 3 victory over the University of Dayton Flyers at Dayton Wednesday afternoon.

The diminutive Cedarville southpaw hurled a game that approximated the best. He retired no fewer than fifteen batters on strikeouts and although he was touched for eight hits he always had the situation well in hand except for one bad inning, the seventh, when the Flyers scored all their three runs.

For that matter, Cedarville confined its scoring to one inning, the fifth, when four runs were scored at the expense of Danny Fitzsimmons, starting Dayton sophomore pitcher.

Fitzsimmons blanked the Borstmen for four rounds but in the fifth Cedarville bunched three of its five hits to push over a quartet of markers with the aid of a few errors. B. Turner, first Cedarville batter, drove a single to left, A. Turner helped out his own cause with a one-bagger to right, Turner fanned but Rife was safe on Fearn's fumble and the Turners' tallied when Zieroff made a wild throw. Rife then progressed to third when Fitzsimmons heaved wildly into center field after the Cedarville runner had been trapped between bases. Allen crossed up the Flyer defense by bunting safely, scoring Rife. Carlow lifted a fly to left and when Colan muffed it Allen scored.

"Bud" Burdzinski then replaced Fitzsimmons in the box and retired the next batter. He got the next thirteen batters to face him in one, two three order, not allowing a hit in four and two-thirds innings, but the damage had already been done.

Turner, after blanking the Flyers for six innings, weakened momentarily in the seventh and was the victim of a three-run rally. Wallace, first batter, worked the southpaw for a pass and Burdzinski smacked a two-bagger sending Wallace to third. Both runners scored when Joe Caveney smashed a long home run to left center. This ended the scoring for the afternoon as Turner was invincible again thereafter.

Cedarville with a record of one victory and one defeat in two starts this season, will clash with the Miami University nine at Oxford Saturday afternoon. Box score:

KNUTE ROCKNES BEST STORIES

As told by
 DON MILLER
 One of the famous Four Horsemen of Notre Dame

One of the best stories he still tell about Knute Rockne has to do with basketball and not football. Believe it or not but Rock was once a basketball coach—for a very short time, it is true, but nevertheless a cage coach.

Gus Dorais, who was Rockne's forward pass partner during their playing days, was cage mentor at Notre Dame back in 1920. Gus fell ill and Rock stepped into his place, temporarily.

Somehow or other Rock never could seem to fathom the hardwood sport and cared very little for it.

I don't recall just how many games that Rockne-coached net team dropped, but they were plenty.

Well, Rockne as basketball coach had a bunch of football players on his quintet Arthur Garvey, Harry Mehre, Rozz Kiley and others. At half-time in one game in which the Irish netters were being shellacked by more experienced foes, Rockne gave a pep talk that is a classic.

He looked over his sorrowing crew and then spoke.
 "Forget this basketball stuff to-night, boys," Rock said. "Go out there and play good, hard-rd football! That's all you know, anyhow!"

BALDWIN MOVES TO CENSURE LABORITES

LONDON, April 16.—To the accompaniment of sustained cheering from the conservative benches, Stanley Baldwin today introduced a formal motion of censure against the labor government of Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald on the grounds of its failure to solve the unemployment problem.

The motion plunged the ministry into one of the most serious crises it had yet faced, but labor leaders remained confident that the motion would be defeated.

ACTRESS MARRIED

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., April 16.—Helen Twelvetrees, film actress, and Frank Woody, real estate man, were married at Reno three weeks ago. It was revealed here today. The actress recently was awarded her final divorce decree from Clark Twelvetrees, whom she sued on the grounds of cruelty.

LILA LEE BETTER

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., April 16.—Apparently fully recovered after spending seven months as an Arizona sanitarium, Lila Lee, film actress, was greeting friends in the motion picture colony today. It is expected that she will resume her work in the picture with in thirty days.

N. Y. STOCK MARKET

NEW YORK, April 16.—Active stocks in all sections of the market settled down to a lower level of prices this morning as a liberal sprinkling of selling orders flowed in over the big board. Losses in the favorites were mostly fractional and the volume of trading was only slightly heavier than in the last two days. Professionals were on the selling side of the market, but once again selling pressure tapered off considerably as the second hour advanced.

 Mrs. H. L. Sayre

In making their decisions as to which should be given the various awards, the judges confessed themselves to have picked a hard job.

The excellence of the work; cleverness in fashioning; the degree of effort displayed; the appropriateness of material and pattern to style of dress; the large amount of hand work in many cases; the originality, were all taken into consideration with the very best judgment of all three ladies finally resulting in the above five awards.

We (Jobe's) wish to thank Mesdames Cherry, Sayre and Dunkle for their kindness and the hard labor which we know they went through in doing this job.

Highlights in Career of Late Nicholas Longworth

With the passing of Nicholas Longworth the nation's capital has lost one of its most popular political characters. Practically his whole adult life was spent in the shadows of the White House. Born in Cincinnati 61 years ago of wealthy parents, he had none of the aloofness that goes with wealth and social eminence. "Nick," as he was called by everyone, had the genius of adapting himself to whatever company he happened to be in. Save for one term — following the Democratic sweep of 1912, when his father-in-law split the Republican Party — he served in Congress since 1903 and during his last three terms was Speaker of the House.

In the early days of Longworth's career some of his penchants were a source of the greatest worry to his political backers. He persisted in wearing spats when many regarded the fashion dudish and affected. He appeared at night sessions dressed in immaculate evening attire at a time when dinner clothes were not generally worn. To crown this most unpolitical behavior, he became a golf addict despite the storm of criticism that was directed at the pastime as "a rich man's game." It was this very imperviousness to criticism that finally won the admiration of all who knew Longworth. A politician by choice, he refused to be a cog in a political machine.

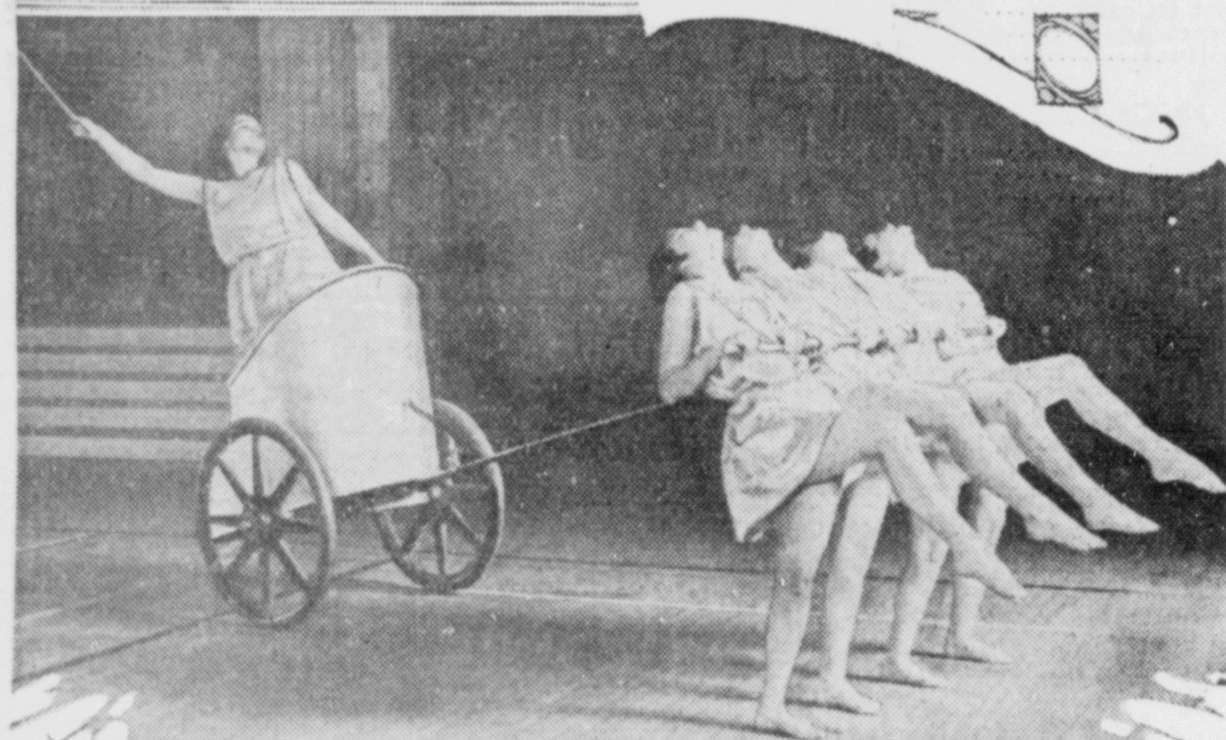

Nicholas Longworth was not a prominent politician when he first went to Washington as Representative from Ohio, in 1903, but his affable personality won him popularity and he was entertained by President Roosevelt at the White House. Here he met Alice Roosevelt. In February, 1906, "Princess" Alice became Mrs. Nicholas Longworth in one of the most brilliant weddings that Washington ever witnessed and many political wise-ones muttered their fears that the young politician was slated for oblivion, his individuality overshadowed by the tremendous Rooseveltian personality. But they didn't know Longworth—as his after achievements show.

When a Queen Shops

Easter shopping carries a distinct appeal, not alone to the stenog. and deb, but also invades even the domains of royalty. De Mar—Father Time's Rival

From all accounts Pheidippides, the Greek, who carried the good news from Marathon to Athens in 490 B. C. was a youth. History does not state his age but he must have been a young fellow because he dropped dead on his arrival. Had he been a comparatively old fellow like Clarence De Mar, for example, he would probably still be running. De Mar recently celebrated his forty-third birthday by training for what he hopes will be his eighth Boston Marathon victory on April 19th. He claimed the greatest Marathoner of all time De Mar won the event in 1911, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1927, 1928 and 1930. A victory this year will mark the twentieth anniversary of his first and all Massachusetts is rooting for the "Old Man of Melrose," but none more ardently than his bride of a year.

itself generous toward unmalicious faults.

"I am the king of all Spaniards and I am Spanish myself. I could have employed divers means to keep the royal prerogatives and effectively fight my adversaries, but I wish to avoid everything that will throw my compatriots into fratricidal civil war."

Equally confident that the republic had come to stay, Provisional President Zamora and members of his cabinet established themselves in the former royal palace and assumed the task of governing the land.

A thorough inventory was ordered of the contents of the historical buildings. Republican flags billowed everywhere in the capital and rejoicing continued, but the provisional administration already faces serious immediate problems. Disorders and rioting were reported raging in Barcelona, Seville and Bilbao.

Drastic measures may become necessary to prevent a spread of these outbreaks and a split in the solidarity of the republic. While hundreds of political exiles poured back into their native land, there were shouts by communists and syndicalists for participation in a government which they claimed owed them much.

In the midst of the national holiday decreed in official recognition of the republic, the provisional government proclaimed to the people that a constitutional parliament would be assembled at the earliest moment.

Under the signature of Provisional President Zamora, the government manifesto also pledged fair elections, religious freedom, justice for all, respect for property rights and a new economic dispensation through making the great landed estates profitable.

The decree announced titles would be abolished and the senators appointed by the king for life turned out of office.

The republican government was undecided on its future action in regard to the self-declared republic of Catalonia. Many royalists, including General Damazo Berenguer, have left the country. Chief of Police Mola of Madrid, was arrested in attempting to leave Spain. A great ovation was tendered Major Ramon Franco on his return here from exile.

An official announcement today states that the country as a whole was quiet. Exodus of former aristocrats continues, with the government secretly taking measures against exportation of capital.

It was learned today that a tragedy occurred while the queen and her family were being carried out of Spain aboard the royal train yesterday afternoon. Two civil guards guarding the right of way were struck and killed as the train neared San Sebastian.

SPANISH ROYAL FAMILY SEEKING PEACE IN FRANCE

group of friends and royalist supporters.

Three hundred Spanish aristocrats bared their heads as the queen descended from the train with her children. All the women awaiting her in the reception party were dressed in black.

With difficulty, apparently under great strain and striving to press back her tears, Queen Victoria passed between two lines of royalists. They seized her hands and kissed them.

A huge bunch of red roses was presented to her as she walked out of the station preceded by Chief of Police Chlappe.

"Viva La Reina!" cried the children and the royalists who followed her.

A crowd of 500 men and women nearly mobbed the royal party despite police details as it reached the street. The police cordon was rushed aside as hundreds pressed forward to kiss the hem of the queen's dress.

Finally, to rescue Victoria from the mob, one of her attendants was forced to "push" her into the waiting automobile. The royal party proceeded to the Hotel Maurice, where the exiles received another ovation from a waiting crowd.

The queen's party consisted of thirty-five persons. Twenty-eight rooms were placed at its disposal by the Hotel Maurice on the first floor.

In the hasty departure from Madrid, the royal family traveled as third class tourists. The queen went constantly.

The Prince of Asturias, heir apparent to the Spanish throne, was so ill that he had to be carried quietly across the international bridge.

On May 31, Victoria and Alfonso would have celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. Before leaving Madrid, where the jubilant shouts of Republican celebrators assailed her ears, the queen stated:

"I am leaving on the same day as I arrived in Spain as a bride-to-be. There was the same bright sunshine then as there is now, but what a sad day this is. I have not slept because of the noise the people made shouting against Alfonso outside the palace."

Alfonso, who was born a king and descends directly from Charles V, holy Roman emperor, left Madrid by a different route from that taken by Queen Victoria and four of her five children. After relinquishing governmental power and witnessing the proclamation of a republic, the monarch slipped out of the jubilant city by motor car and drove south.

Arriving at Cartagena, the king boarded the waiting cruiser Principe Alfonso after receiving a military salute from the port garrison and commander, and stated he expected to return.

The cruiser sailed under sealed orders at 4:55 a. m. touched at Gibraltar to pick up the king's third son, and then proceeded directly to Marseilles.

Happy Theatrical Marriages No Novelty

Contrary to Popular Belief Instances of Marital Devotion Among Stage Folk Outnumber Mismatings and Divorces. Many Examples of Wedded Love That Have Withstood Acid Test of Continuous Association.

NEW YORK, April 16.—There's happiness amongst the stars! No, not the heavenly variety but those very glittering stars that shine so brightly in the theatrical firmament. Which will be news to lots of people who think stage folk never make obeisance to the domestic gods, but marry merely to prepare for the publicity that so often surrounds a theatrical divorce.

Of course there are divorces, disagreements and disastrous marriages amongst the people of the theater. But not, they will hasten to inform you, in greater numbers than among members of any other profession or career. For, they argue, in what other walk of life would you find a handsome woman walking away from the chance of a lifetime in order to be with a man, when that man is her husband. That is just one of the things that isn't done in polite circles, but in the theater, well—that's another and a nicer story.

The stage abounds with happy couples like pretty Edna Best, who walked off the Hollywood lot and took the first train East to handsome Herbert Marshall from whom she couldn't just bear to be separated for more than three weeks. Real love is like that, and that's the brand of love with which the stage abounds.

It's easy to imagine Bill Brady grunting his satisfaction when he read the Edna Best story, even if he did desert a job. For William A. Brady and his wife, Grace George, are among the happiest and most devoted of stage couples. They consult each other in everything and neither would dream of going any theatrical work without co-operation from each other. And Bill Brady, Jr., and Katherine Alexander bid fair to emulate the example of the older Bradys. And then there is the domestic saga of exotically Eugenie Leontovich and her husband, Gregory Ratoff. The actress is starring in "Grand Hotel" in New York. Her husband is appearing in Chicago. And so each Saturday night the two take the train and meet in Pittsburgh where they spend Sunday together.

They fail to see anything extraordinary in their devotion and believed it only to be typical of the theater. The discomfort, the inconvenience of the trip is as nothing when compared to the joy of being together for at least one day each week. Sounds like domestic harmony, doesn't it?

Another divinely happy couple is June Walker and Geoffrey Kerr. They always try to secure engagements together and one sees them always in restaurants or clubs, tremendously engrossed in each other. Then there's glamorous Claudette Colbert and Norman Foster, two of the cleverest young people of the theater. When the movies claimed Claudette she persuaded Paramount to give her husband a contract, too, so that they could be together even on the lot. Is that wifely devotion or not?

It has often been said that being together continuously destroys the delicate fabric that is marriage. But it hasn't been so in the case of Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontaine. For they invariably appear in the same Theater Guild offerings and their devotion offstage is just as intense. Each is the other's best booster. Of another generation, E. H. Sothern and Julia greatest happiness in the company as a perfect example of domestic harmony in the theater. They are still just as devoted to each other and are a happy instance of a couple who have walked the road of life together and found the going all the pleasanter for each other's companionship. Then, too, there are the Cohorns who have worked together and been happily married for, lo, these many years.

Recently Victor Moore, the comedian and his wife, Emma Littlefield, celebrated their silver wedding anniversary. They, too, have always appeared in vaudeville together until quite recently. And then there's Mr. and Mrs. Florenz Ziegfeld. Mrs. Flo, the winsome Billie Burke, has found her greatest happiness in the companionship of Flo and their daughter, Patricia. To see them all together at the Ziegfeld home at Hastings-on-Hudson is to know that theatrical people have found the key to domestic happiness. Theatrical divorces may be news but happiness in the theater world is certainly no novelty.

WOMAN DRIVER HURT AS CAR SIDESWIPED THURSDAY MORNING

Mrs. Blanche Grindle, Springfield, was treated at the office of a Yellow Springs physician for an injury to the hip suffered when her auto overturned after allegedly being sideswiped by another machine on the Springfield-Xenia Pike near Goes Thursday morning.

L. A. Davis, county road patrolman, learned Mrs. Grindle was driving a coach toward Xenia and that the collision occurred when a coach driven by Mrs. Clark Burnside, colored, 513 S. Williams St., Springfield, traveling in the same direction, tried to pass the former's machine.

Mrs. Grindle's car upset in a ditch and a passing autoist took her to Yellow Springs for medical attention. Mrs. Burnside and Mrs. William White, colored, 524 W. Liberty St., Springfield, passenger in Mrs. Burnside's auto, escaped injury, although their auto careened off the highway, across the adjoining traction line and struck a pole. Two rear tires were deflated.

LAST LAUGH

MANASQUAN, N. J., April 16.—Eugene Pullen won a pocketbook in a local lodge contest, and on his way home stopped at a pool room to flash a roll of currency contained. Someone followed him out, struck him senseless with a club and stole the pocketbook and money. But Pullen had the last laugh. The pocketbook was filled with stage money.

TWO CONFESS THEFT OF CHICKENS WHILE THIRD FIGHTS CASE

Three Negroes, alleged to have stolen seven chickens from the farm of Thurman Earley, James-town Pike, Monday night, were arraigned before Municipal Judge E. Dawson Smith Thursday morning on burglary and larceny charges to which two pleaded guilty and the third not guilty.

Martin Nooks, 50, and Reid Mackabee, 35, pleaded guilty and were held to the grand jury under bonds of $500 each, while William Byrd, 26, will be given a hearing in view of his not guilty plea. His bond was also fixed at $500.

A full confession was said to have been obtained from Nooks by Prosecuting Attorney Marcus McCallister, Sheriff John Baughn and Police Chief O. H. Cornwell, who questioned the suspects at the jail Wednesday night.

A visit to Nooks' home resulted in the recovery of one of the stolen hens, identification being made later by the owner, authorities say. Authorities also discovered a pair of shoes which fit exactly in imprints found in the field near the poultry house which had been ransacked, it is said.

Nooks, in his confession, was said to have implicated Byrd and Mackabee. Six of the seven chickens taken had been destroyed.

Since the seven chickens could not be divided equally between the three men, authorities learned Nooks had purchased the two-thirds interest of his companions in the seventh hen, paying one a quarter and owing the other a similar amount.

CAST SELECTED BY CENTRAL SENIORS

The cast, which includes eight characters, most of whom have equally prominent roles, follows: Charles Adair as "Bud Weaver," Anita Cherry as "Ann Weaver," Paul McClellan as "Jim Thayer," Birch Bell as "Kerry Van Kind," Jared Clark as "Bradley Clement," Virginia Martin as "Marella Scottie," Harold Glass as "Mr. Weaver." The girl who will play the role of "Mrs. Weaver" has not been chosen. Catherine Huffman, Mary Hayward and Juanita McPherson being the three candidates for the part.

DRAW EXTRA JURORS FOR TWO NEW TRIALS

Names of fifteen more persons, who may be needed for jury service supplementing the petit jury panel during the remainder of the January term of court, were drawn from the jury wheel in Common Pleas Court Wednesday.

The additional jurors will report April 20, the date assigned for re-trial of the first of two criminal cases which ended in jury disagreements at previous trials.

The cases to be retried are those of Charles Randall and Ralph Gorman. A jury was unable to reach a verdict when Randall was tried for burglary and larceny February 20. Trial of Gorman on a charge of furnishing liquor to minors ended in a disagreement February 27. An indictment charging Gorman with receiving stolen property is pending.

POSTMASTER WARNS SAVINGS HOLDERS

Postmaster C. S. Frazer has been advised that after June 30 the postal department will not handle as free matter any war savings stamps, war saving certificates, thrift stamps or treasury savings stamps.

Holders of such stamps are urged to present them at once to the post office for transmission to the department. Proof of ownership is required, however, and post office employees have been authorized to assist the holders in preparing any documentary evidence that may be required.

Jack's Romance Takes Count

Matrimony has received a knockout blow from Jack Dempsey, who has taken up residence in Reno to comply with the law in seeking a divorce from his actress wife, Estelle Taylor. The former king of the fist world is quoted as declaring that Estelle asked him for her freedom, as, according to Jack, she prefers a career to domesticity.

AWARD CONTRACTS FOR HORSE STALLS

Contracts for the carpenter work and furnishing materials for the construction of seventy-two new frame horse stalls at the Xenia fairgrounds, replacing those destroyed by fire last fall, have been awarded by the fair board to local bidders.

Herbert Conklin, Xenia, submitted the low bid of $774 for the carpenter work and laying the foundation, while the Greene County Lumber Co. was the low bidder for furnishing lumber and other materials. The successful bid amounted to $2,987.78.

Fair board officials revealed they had decided to have the stalls covered with shingle roofs because this type of construction will be cooler for the horses in hot weather.

The line of stalls along the north fringe of the fairgrounds will be completed by July 1.

RETURNED HERE TO FACE ASSAULT CASE

Herbert Rowe, Fairfield, wanted by local authorities on a charge of assaulting and robbing John Hoover, cook at the Fairfield Air Depot, of $92 and a wrist watch worth $40 last April 5, was apprehended at Ironton, O., and returned to Xenia Wednesday by deputy sheriffs to face prosecution.

Rowe is expected to be arraigned in Municipal Court Friday on the affidavit filed by Hoover, who told authorities he was slugged, robbed, forced out of Rowe's auto and left lying along the Indian Riffle Road in the southwestern part of Greene County.

THE CREDITORS' LOSS IS TO BE YOUR GAIN!
PRICES THE LOWEST YOU HAVE SEEN IN THIRTY YEARS

Dan's Stores tried to sell goods too cheap and as a result they were taken over by the creditors, who, acting under the court's orders, sold their stock in bulk to satisfy creditors' claims.

With an original inventory of around $70,000, these stores were appraised, advertised in the legal way and sold at auction, realizing for the creditors about one half of the original inventory price.

Owning this stock as we do at but a fraction of its actual original cost price, we are in a position to make you lower prices than you have seen for thirty years back. Dan's very low prices will seem high in comparison.

GOTHAM'S BUSY PROBER

Judge Samuel Seabury, Delving Deeply Into City Administration, Always a Fighter

Samuel Seabury

By HOWARD P. JONES
Central Press Staff Writer

NEW YORK, April 16—Charges and counter-charges. Graft and corruption throwing the scales of justice out of balance. A prosecuting attorney under fire, not so much for what he's done, than for what he hasn't done. Allegations that judgeships have been bought and sold. The mayor of America's largest city facing the threat of removal.

Into the midst of this chaos comes a man to investigate, sift the chaff from the wheat, and pass judgment on the facts. What manner of man is this, who can walk unscathed in New York's political slums? Who is there, so free from taint himself, that an aroused citizenry will trust his judgment, his impeccability?

Judge Samuel Seabury, appointed by the appellate division to investigate charges of corruption in the magistrates' courts and later named by Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt to take charge of an investigation into the conduct of the office of District Attorney Thomas C. Crain, is peculiarly fitted for the task.

A Six-Footer
Personally, he is six feet of solidity. He gives no impression of aggressiveness but of firmness and complete dependability. He speaks with authority and might be one of those dignified British magistrates whose robes and white curls add to their Olympian austerity.

He is remarkably a non-partisan figure. He has sought election on Republican, Democratic, Progressive and Fusion tickets. If he has any politics, he is an anti-Tammany Democrat. His fairness and capacity to weigh the merits of a case were paid high tribute by Supreme Court Justice Henry A. Gildersleeve years ago. He said: "I know of no man on the bench today to whom I would more willingly submit a case in which I am interested, confident that when judgment was rendered, whether for me or against me, it would be right according to the law and fair to both sides."

Wanted Support Later
When he was running for the governorship of the state of New York in 1916, Seabury told one of the big newspaper editors that he would want his support more after election than before.

"If the great newspapers work against me in the election, I may be defeated. That's purely personal, and of comparatively little importance. But if I am elected, and then fail to inspire the support of the press, I may not be able to do things so necessary to be done in this state—and that would not be personal and it would be of great importance."

A significant example of the impersonal approach Judge Seabury makes to problems. He is neither a hidebound conservative nor a stormy radical, although in his earlier years he was called radical. He believes neither in hasty progress nor in holding back because of fear or satisfaction in the status quo. He merely says: "You can't take all the hills at high speed."

One of his most famous utterances reveals his attitude on corruption in high places. Years ago, in his charge to the grand jury in the police graft cases, he urged the members of the jury not to be misled by the cry that revelation of corruption would bring shame on the city. Shame could only come from failure to expose corruption, he said. His words have significance today.

Knows Highways, Byways
Fifty-eight years old, Seabury has always lived in New York and has always been in public life, so he knows the highways and byways. He could have followed the byways, but he didn't. His father was an Episcopal clergyman. More important than that, the tradition of the family lay in that direction. The portrait of Samuel Seabury, first Anglican bishop in America, hangs on the wall of his home.

At twenty-four he ran for the assembly, but was defeated. Two years later, in 1899, he ran for city judge, but was defeated. In 1901—that stirring year in New York politics, when Seth Low was chosen mayor, and William Travers Jerome became district attorney—Seabury, at 28, was swept into the office of justice of the city court, running as an independent Democrat on the fusion-anti-Tammany ticket.

From that time he climbed. Four years later he was elected to the supreme court, where he served until elevated to the court of appeals in the 1914 election. In that year, Seabury, running as a Democrat, carried the state by 56,000 plurality in a year when the state Republican ticket won by 145,000.

Logical Candidate for Governor
The Democrats could not overlook him. He was the logical candidate for governor two years later. He resigned his position on the bench to make the race, but lost out.

Despite his defeat and his defiance of Tammany, he has remained a power in the Democratic party.

In Alfred E. Smith he saw "the best representative of the worst element of the Democratic party." Later, however, he was converted to the Smith cause.

Seabury's name now is mentioned considerably as fusion candidate for mayor.

His life has been consistent—he always has been the reliable substantial man. He played guard on the football team when he was a boy. He still is playing "guard"—now in the public interest.

Love Rather Than Fame

Dr. Gino Lombroso Ferrero, World-Famed Scientist, Wishes Not Beauty, Fame or Renown for Her Daughter, but a Home, Husband and Family.

CESAIRE LOMBROSO DR. NINA LOMBROSO FERRERO and DAUGHTER NINA GUGLIELMO FERRERO

NEW YORK, April 16.—Among the latest arrivals to gay Gotham is a little gray-haired woman, who looks more like some-body's mother than one of the world's most distinguished intellectuals. She is Dr. Gino Lombroso Ferrero, famous scientist and daughter of a no less famous father, the late Cesare Lombroso, the great criminologist, and wife of Guglielmo Ferrero, noted Italian historian.

She has made three wishes for her daughter, Nina. Like the queen in the fairy tale, this brilliant woman, who has won fame as an author and scientist, did not wish for her daughter renown like that which she has found. Neither did she wish for beauty, nor wealth, but for a home, a husband, and many oh many children.

If she were only the daughter of Cesare Lombroso and the wife of such a prominent historian, such sentiments would be natural and in a great measure expected.

But the author of "The Soul of London," in which she assailed man's misunderstanding and deplored the lack of understanding between the sexes, has ever been more than a dutiful daughter and devoted wife. When she was hardly more than a young girl, she became her father's secretary, compiling his notes, and later wrote a biography of him.

Her books, "The Advantages of Degeneration" and "The Soul of Woman" have made the name of Gino Lombroso Ferrero, doctor of letters and of medicine, celebrated in its own right.

It is to be wondered at, then, that such a distinguished woman should make such homely wishes for the eager, though soft-spoken interpreter for her mother's unsure English, who firmly agrees with the principles of her mother's ideas.

Nina is preparing to be a librarian, after a brief siege of interest in agriculture, but this is just something to take the place of home, husband and children, if these should not be her lot. In addition to making known her wishes for the future happiness of Nina, Signora Ferrero, was simply staggered by this country.

She voiced the impression, hands fluttering with excitement: "New York is like a storm, an inferno. Perhaps when she has seen a little more of the country through her lecture tour, her initial impression will be modified. Dr. Guglielmo Ferrero is accompanying his wife, while soft-voiced Nina goes along as secretary to her distinguished parents.

MAN IN "SHANTY TOWN" SAYS HE IS BROTHER OF "DIVINE SARAH"

SARAH BERNHARDT

"I WENT to Muskogee to see Sarah on her last visit to the United States, but she wouldn't see me—I was just a tinker and she was Sarah Bernhardt and famous."

United States in company with an aunt.

Sarah's first success came in 1867, when she appeared in the role of Marie de Neuberg, in "Blas," a Victor Hugo vehicle. Not long after this she began her trips to the United States. Joe met her a number of times. The visits, Joe says, were not always pleasant, and he now holds nothing but bitterness in his heart for the sister who he believes might have made his path through life far easier.

Went To See Her

The last time Sarah Bernhardt appeared in this region Joe went to Muskogee to see her.

"She would not see me," Joe said, his eyes downcast. "You see, I was just a tinker. She was Sarah Bernhardt, and famous. Blood meant nothing."

Until recently Joe has been able to provide for his few wants by repairing stoves and other odd jobs. Last month he moved down to the old mill. He has no rent to pay and no one to bother him. Only rats and mice disturb his quiet.

Joe came to Indian Territory in 1890. His familiarity with successes of the legitimate stage indicates that he has followed, through the press, the doings of his late half-sister and "her world."

McALESTER, Okla., April 16.—Down by the railroad tracks in McAlester's shanty-town, an abandoned flour mill is "home" to Joe Bernhardt, and Joe still retains that "something" from better days which lends credence to his claim that he is a half-brother of the immortal Sarah Bernhardt.

Joe, who now has time to recall the days of his youth, and is eager to reminisce, says that he was born in Paris, France, in 1850. His first recollections of Sarah were when he was three. At that time, he says, his half sister—whose name was destined to live for decades in the theatrical history—often took him with her to the Port Saint Martin theater in Paris, where she appeared in the ballet.

Joe Had No Encouragement

"I sometimes tried to copy the steps as practiced under the stern eye of the ballet master," Bernhardt recalls, "but he gave me no encouragement. He said I was too young. Sarah was about 10 years old at that time."

In 1856 Sarah entered a convent at Versailles, and Joe came to the Famous Reporter gets another thrill when he goes headline hunting at Sohio Refinery...

PRESSURE ENOUGH TO BLOW YOU TO THE MOON

by FLOYD GIBBONS

They use it in heat-tempering Sohio gasolines

HELLO EVERYBODY:

Talk about your rarebit dreams! Maybe I didn't live through a hair-curler in broad daylight while the lads out at the Sohio refinery were showing me how they fricassee the molecules and multiply the pep of that stride-ahead super-cracked motor fuel they call X-70.

Believe me, toasted cheese at bedtime can hold no further terrors for me after my ordeal by toasted oil. Boil me in white-hot gasoline if that steel-nerved Sohio bunch didn't have me running the temperature of my life.

A thousand degrees of heat and a thousand pounds of pressure—a thousand pounds to the square inch—may not sound like much when you say it fast. But when you have boiling gasoline sizzling all around you at that heat and that pressure—well, by jingo, it wasn't any stunt at all for me to imagine myself in a torture chamber of the old Inquisition and elected for a singe.

There wasn't a moment during that whole inspection tour when my heart wasn't tangling with my larynx, and I'm not ashamed to admit it. Sitting on a figurative powder mine and playing with sure enough fire, is just part of the day's work for those Sohio folks. But it's out of my line—and that's that.

I wasn't kidding myself about the danger, either. It was right on hand, and there was plenty of it. My guides cheerfully admitted that. As we were entering the plant, one of them dropped a word of advice that sent a chill along my backbone.

"If anything busts," he said, "run first and investigate afterward."

Then another chap came through with a matter of fact explanation of just what I was going up against. He told me that thousand-degrees hot X-70 didn't need anybody to set a match to it to produce fireworks. One leaky valve, or a break anywhere in the line, would do the trick. If the vaporized gasoline stewing at that terrific temperature ever got out into the open air, it would be just too bad. At the instant it came in contact with oxygen, up it would go in flames.

When that bad news was sprung on me, I began thinking of the refinery as one huge accident on its way to happen. I knew the Sohio crowd were working with heats and pressures way above any ever ventured before in the history of refining—holding them in pipes and coils of special new alloys developed for their particular job. On paper those alloys figured out as tough enough to carry the load. But I'll tell the world I kept my fingers crossed while I was climbing over those great cannonlike cracking coils where the old X-70—hotter than the hinges—was having its molecules lifted. And when those Sohio research scientists swing open a little glass window and let me look into the inferno of the furnace where better than 1600 degrees of heat were blistering the gasoline lines, I sure thought suddenly of a lot of places where I'd rather have been.

Keeping my mind on the facts and figures being rattled off while I was in the vicinity of that furnace—that was certainly some job of concentration. Batteries of flame-throwers lined in front were filling the interior with a seething, swirling mass of blazing gas, and all that stood between that 1650-degree fire and the pent-up fury of the boiling oils just above was a little matter of three-eighths of an inch of steel tubing.

The steel was specially forged—the steel industry's contribution to the Sohio heat-tempering process; and the thing that makes it possible. I was told that ordinary steel would melt like butter at such a temperature. That was dope direct from headquarters, for the man talking in swift, punchy sentences at my elbow was the originator of heat-tempered gasoline—Stuart Harrison, Sohio's vice-president in charge of manufacturing and boss molecule buster of the X-70 works.

"That heat," he said, "is right up to the limit of our fire protection. If we let it run any hotter it would melt the brick of the furnace. We're as high as we can go with heat and pressure—right up to the tensile strength of the metal. Do you know what would happen if we stepped things up a little further? That steel would stretch like a rubber band."

You bet that was something I was willing to take on faith, without being shown. If anybody had made a move to turn on more heat that party would have been one reporter shy all of a sudden, and I don't mean maybe.

The molecule buster switched onto the subject of safety devices then, and that made pleasant listening. The perils of that gasoline-toasting racket were plenty apparent to the naked eye without having them drilled in through the ears. Gadgets that I was told were valves of forged steel—carved out of solid blocks of metal—were pointed out to me.

"Got to have forged valves on this job," said Harrison. "Flame creep into castings. They wouldn't stand up under the high pressures and temperatures, and the job would be destroyed by fire. 'Notice that each of those valves has a chain and sprocket on it. They all run behind that brick wall. If anything happens out here the valves can be controlled by an operator back of the wall. Those tubes over there, they are nothing more or less than gun barrels. They're bored out, leaving walls more than half an inch thick. We don't take any chance on lap weld or hammer weld. You see, we're operating on a safety factor of four to one."

More safety dodges—everything automatic—were shown to me in the control room, a place that looked like a hospital corridor with its walls of gleaming tile and glass.

Floyd Gibbons inspects one of the special steel alloy furnaces necessary to control Sohio pressure. This one holds 1,000 pounds pressure on one side... 75 pounds on the other.

Here's a whole gang of Sohio "molecule busters" taking a few minutes off in lower Gibbons relates his impression of the Sohio heat-tempering method.

"That's a heavy wire glass," explained the molecule buster. "It will hold against anything short of a tremendous gas explosion. You see the pumping room beyond. The oil running through there is so hot that it would immediately put the room on fire in case of a leak. If that happens the operator in here just closes a valve. The fire out under the cracking coil is thrown off, and the pump room is filled with steam. These instruments you see along the wall are checking temperatures all over the job."

Outside the control room a sample of finished, heat-tempered X-70 was drawn off and handed to me.

Next stop after that was the soaking drums—enormous cylinders like up-ended cannon, bored out of mighty chunks of that special alloy steel. Harrison told me that, inside their seven-inch walls gasoline molecules were being chewed up in the grand finale of the process that yields heat-tempered Sohio X-70.

Those soakers looked good and substantial to me. They didn't seem anything like as flighty as that soaring furnace down below. I took their word that these seven-inch walls were plenty strong to hold that thousand-pound pressure and the terrific heat that went with it. Just to prove it, I leaned against one of the soakers while we stood up on the wind-swept platform and chinned.

But you won't catch me doing that again. No, sir—never! It just happened to be my lucky day. Nothing happened. But a couple of days later—wow! That was a double Josiah day; Friday the Thirteenth, and the same soaker I had been using for a backrest celebrated by going on fire. They wrote to tell me what I had missed—and gosh wasn't I glad I had missed it. Even though I was a couple of states and a couple of days away from that blaze, the description of it sure raised the goose-flesh. For thirty-five minutes that personal pet soaking drum of mine was just one mass of flaming vapor, and every minute of the thirty-five carried the possibility that the whole shooting-match would go bye-bye. However, the forged steel walls stood the gaff and the soakers are still where I saw them last. Okay. They can stay there—but I'll stay somewhere else, thank you.

Well, I'll be switched, boys and girls. Here I've mused clear through my space again, and haven't unloaded half what I had on my mind. But, anyway, I'll be back on the air next week with another earful about Sohio X-70. Until then—be careful what you lean against!

READ THIS FIRST:

Mary Vaughn is private secretary to Ronald K. Foster, an investment banker of Wall Street. She supports her family of mother, twin brothers, and younger sister, Bonnie, to whom she has always given the best of everything. Bonnie dislikes work and makes it known that she does not intend to drudge for a living all her days. She is the spoiled beauty of the family. Mary is in love with the bonair Dick Baldwin, who works for another firm in the street, but Bonnie is doing her best to attract him to herself. Martin Frazier is Foster's wealthiest client, who is very much attracted to Mary, but she treats him with polite diplomacy. He persists in his attention until Mary's employer asks her to humor him occasionally by going out with him on business principles. He is too valuable a customer to offend. So, Mary consents to dine with Frazier on Saturday night.

Mary goes shopping for a new evening gown on Saturday afternoon and Frazier sends his car for her in the evening. Bonnie resolves that Dick shall know about this. Martin Frazier puzzles Mary that evening. She had expected to meet a difficult situation, but he met only affectionately courteous to her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER 15

How different was the next evening with Dick. Instead of apprehension, indecision and final bewilderment, Mary experienced only joyous anticipation, confidence and content. She wore the new sea-green and silver lame frock again and accepted with deep gratitude Dick's very evident admiration. He lifted his winged eyebrows with unconcealed surprise. "Say, C. W., you look like the Queen of Sheba herself. What any Solomon would need with a thousand wives if he had one like you, I can't tell you. Just wait until that crowd sees my new pansy."

His ardent eyes burned down into hers and his hands clasped her shoulders for an instant when he held her wrap. The evening was quite another revelation to Mary. Studio parties in Greenwich Village with "arty" cliques and always implied to her something risque and bizarre. Perhaps there were that kind, too. But she was delightedly surprised at the group to which Dick introduced her. The party was in one of the artists' apartments on the south side of Washington Square. It belonged to Ramon and Willa Duchon. Ramon was the famous creator of the comic strip, "Peppy Pansy," and his wife did illustrations for children's pages. Mary liked them both instantly. Ramon was a tall, rather slender youth, with copper hair and humorous eyes, who looked more like a mining engineer than an artist; and Willa was little and black-eyed and vivacious. Not vivacious like Bonnie, who employed her vivacity to attract attention to herself. Willa just seemed to be everywhere at once, doing everything, helping everyone to do something. She talked and laughed with everyone at the same time about most anything, without seeming at all flip-pant or loquacious. The apartment consisted of one very long high-ceilinged room having three long windows at each end and an open staircase up the middle of one side wall. This led to a bath and bedrooms above. There was nothing garish or bawdy about it. The bedroom in which Mary left her wrap, had twin beds, dressing table and chest of soft green enamel with triangular touches of black as to corners and knobs. There were sheer, cool green hangings at the windows with silver and black brocade pull curtains. Glittering cut glass toilet articles on the dressing table reflected and returned the lights in the mirror—the whole an atmosphere of fresh, clear, sparkling loveliness.

The room downstairs was a study of comfortable harmony without being studied at all. Every corner seemed to be represented when one looked about, but the predominating note was a warm maroon red that rambed over the somewhat worn rug—which had always known hospitality—leaped up to rest in several of the deep armchairs and glowed down from soft chenille hangings over the windows.

The room had two open fireplaces, in both of which a wood fire snapped cheerfully on this crisp autumn night. The two mantels seemed to divide the room into its component parts. In one end a grand piano faced the long windows and a pillowed couch stood at an angle before the fire. A buffet flanked the middle wall opposite the staircase, with a long, refectory table between. The walls and tables were gay with the varied assortment that adventurers collect: mellowed tapestries, Anatolian mats, pottery of every genus and description, from the rich deep shades of a Carlton bowl to primitive, unglazed earthenware. There were deep red dahlias in a vase of pigeon-blood cloisonne, several pieces of delicately carved ivory, bronze bowls on teakwood bases, and two lovely oil canvases, probably done by the artists, themselves, Mary guessed.

Not all of this could be seen at a glance. The whole charming effect had to be absorbed, collected, and piece-meal. At the same time, the guests were quite as charming and interesting as the room. The slender, dark, olive-skinned Ghetia Dachtli—the young sculptress whom the critics had already acclaimed—was as reticent, demure and quiet as her Latin beauty was poignant, startling and attractive. Noreen Bennett was a columnist on the Manhattan News, Sterling Clark was a copywriter for a big advertising firm, Sheila King specialized in graphology, Seymour Ashley was an astrologer—Mary's head whirled with a giddy delight at so many bewildering names, celebrities and "ologies," as she called them. There were others present, less prominent in the confusion of names. She felt like a mere atom of inferiority among them. Then she remembered that Dick's world was only finance, and was comforted. If he could deal with cold figures and hard cash and mingle with the scintillating brilliancy of this group—so would she. But she would have to be a retiring spectator for awhile. No sooner were her resolutions made than they were shattered by Willa Duchon. She caught Mary's hand affectionately and drew her arm about her waist.

"So this is Dick's latest find? Well, you've scored a touchdown this time that decides the game. At least we hope it will, you charming Don Quixote. I think you've met us all, now, haven't you. And now, I'll wager you are a marvelous cook—I can guess. And am I glad? These girls are absolute novices when it comes to chafing dishes and grilles. So I have to do it all. My maid takes Sundays off and they all trowle in here for supper. Whoopie, Willa can cook, so what's the grief? I know you'll help me."

"Wait a minute you don't have to guess if she is a good cook," someone interrupted. "How about it, Ash?"

They all turned toward a lanky, dark-haired youngish man who sat with one foot swinging over the arm of his chair. He looked at Mary and smiled friendly.

"It all depends upon your sign," he said. "When were you born?" "June 27th," Mary replied, wondering what it was all about.

"You're right, Willa," Seymour Ashley declared, clapping his large hand on his swinging knee. "She's a Cancer woman, best home-makers and cooks on this earth. Dick, you've picked yourself a nice one, no gettin' by that. Well, a big financier battling with the monetary elements needs a good, comfortable home to retire to. Now, we temperamental people can take a snack anywhere, any time, and thrive."

"But I notice you like to hang in here for Sunday suppers and eat until you don't leave me so much as a black cup of coffee for Monday breakfast," Ramon observed with jolly sarcasm and a twinkle in his eye. "Remember, I picked me a Cancer woman, if I am an artist. Well, what's wrong? How about a tune?"

From somewhere there appeared magically a couple of banjos, a mandolin and a ukulele. Clark, the copy-writer, slid onto the piano bench and struck a few tentative chords. And before Mary could wink an eye, the room was filled with rollicking melody, gliding dancers and hilarious mirth. The astrologer crossed the room to Mary. "May I dance with you before Willa drags you away to culinary duties?" His eyes smiled with his lips. He was both ungainly and strangely good looking at the same time. His hands were large, as were his feet, his tall form appeared to droop and his feet to shamble, yet he had dignity and grace. His clothes seemed to sag about him, but Mary noted that they were of excellent quality and cut. He was as easy to know as his appearance indicated.

Dick cut in on him when they had circled the room twice. Ashley looked down. "You wouldn't get away with that if she didn't belong to you," he warned. But he smiled at Mary. "If you handle the chafing dish like you dance, this ravenous crowd will be hunting up your street and number."

"I know they would like you," Dick told her proudly. "What do you think of 'em?"

"Why, Dick—they're wonderful. You do know the nicest people—worthwhile people. I don't wonder that you wish you were one of them."

"I am, in a way," he said, with a far away expression in his eyes. "I think big business needs creative talent and romance and humor just as art does. I believe the ones who climb to the top are the ones who employ just those things, too. The plodders are the ones who insist that business is business, without a heart—in general, that is. But it requires a sense of high adventure and originality for a man to strike out into really big business."

"How right you are," Mary marveled, thinking how just right he always seemed to be.

DEATH ENDS DRAMATIC MURDER TALE

Mrs. Eva Kaber's Passing In Prison Recalls Story Of Intrigue That Baffled Nation For Years

By Central Press
CLEVELAND, O., April 16.—Twelve years ago Mrs. Catherine Eva Kaber, then 38, wife of a wealthy publisher, residing in Lakewood, Cleveland suburb, plotted the death of her husband and bargained with assassins for his killing.

Today Mrs. Kaber has joined her husband in death just a few hours before the governor of the state was to pass on a plea for her parole, and closing for all time the most sensational murder case Cleveland and northern Ohio ever have known—a story that was followed by the entire nation.

In a final attempt to cheat the law Mrs. Kaber, suffering from a tumor, refused time after time to submit to an operation that might have prolonged her life, hoping that the state, moved by her plight would allow her to spend the last days of her life outside the walls of Marysville, O., reformatory.

With her hopes for a parole high, fate in its irony stepped in.

Stabbed 24 Times
On the night of July 18, 1919, two assassins crept into the mansion of Dan Kaber, 46, on fashionable Lake Ave. The publisher, his body wasted by poison administered by his wife over a period of months, was unable to put up much of a battle. While one of the men held him, the other plunged a stiletto into his body twenty-four times.

Kaber, taken to a hospital, lingered for two days.

Robbery was believed the motive, the silverware in the dining room being strewn about.

The widow timed herself to return in her car from a summer home at Cedar Point, O., in time to make a dramatic discovery of the murder and to announce to reporters that jewels were missing.

At the inquest physicians found enough arsenic in his body to kill three men. This caused suspicion, but clues failed. Those in the house at the time, Mrs. Kaber's mother and a daughter by a former marriage, Marion McArdle, seemingly could throw no light on the killing. Lakewood detectives called the murder the most mysterious in the history of the city. The case was apparently closed.

Father Persistent
Moses Kaber, father of the slain man, was not satisfied. Suspecting the widow of the plot, he hired detectives and for two years the detectives sought clues. Traps were laid.

The detectives had a woman detective introduced to Mrs. Kaber in New York, where Mrs. Kaber had gone to live on the money she collected from the husband's estate; and in a month after that the woman detective had become Mrs. Kaber's private secretary.

It took Mrs. Kaber a year to trust the secretary to the point where the whole story finally came out; how she had come to hunger so for her husband's money that she wondered how to kill him; how she went to Emma Colavito, "poison queen," and got a poison to put into the invalid's food—for Kaber had been ill for a year before his death. How she waited for the poison to act, and how she suffered torments when it appeared that her husband's system absorbed the poison; how she went to "Big Emma" and demanded action, and how Emma Colavito hired two ignorant laborers who believed she could "put a curse on them" and had made them enter the Kaber home—the door being conveniently left open—and slay Kaber in the night, while Mrs. Kaber at Cedar Point, an Ohio summer resort, sat arranging her alibi.

Mrs. Kaber Convicted
In a sensational trial, Mrs. Kaber was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment at Marysville. Mrs. Colavito was tried and acquitted, but three years later was convicted of poisoning an Italian four years previously and given life. Vittorio Pisselli, the man who handled the stiletto, was traced to Italy, tried there, and sentenced to twenty years at hard labor. Salvatore Cala, the second of the two men, was convicted of first degree murder and sentenced to life. The case against Mrs. Brickel was nolled because of her age. Marion McArdle, Mrs. Kaber's daughter, who was alleged to have played the piano in the Kaber home while the mother gave instructions to the assassins, was tried and acquitted. A Prophecy That Failed

"I'll be out in a year," Mrs. Kaber announced as she left to serve her sentence. She was an unruly prisoner, several times plotting jail breaks that were discovered and for which she was punished. Then came her illness four years ago. Mrs. Kaber refused medical treatment, asserting that she would heal herself by her faith. But reformatory officials discounted that reason, declaring that she was using it merely as another attempt to gain her freedom. The governor was believed ready to pass favorably on a sick parole. But fate took a hand in that.

Kaber, the elder, relentless pursuer of Mrs. Kaber, died in 1928, a year after he had defeated an effort by Marion McArdle to gain a pardon for Mrs. Kaber.
